

Rini's Story

Over the last 82 years, thousands of students have studied at the Khunti Seventh-day Adventist School. For Rini Kongari, the school has a special place in her heart. Her mother studied here, and she has lived nearby for all of her life.

Today, she's in 10th grade, and although she was raised as an Adventist, one of her favorite things about her school is that she learns more about Jesus and His love for her. She even wants to become a teacher so she can spread God's love to the students she'll meet. But she notices a difference when she leaves the campus and meets people in the community.

"Many times I visit people that don't know a bit about Christ," said Rini. "I want people to join our school so that they may know about Christ."

Joining Rini at the Khunti Adventist School would be challenging. The buildings are old, and the classrooms are crowded. Each year, the school must turn away hundreds of students because there is simply no space.

"The windows have been broken out. The floors have been destroyed," said Rini. "So we need new buildings so that more students can come here and have a good education."

In just a few weeks, all of that is going to change. Maranatha is almost done building a large school building for hundreds of students at the Khunti school. Soon, more kids can study there and learn about Jesus.

Your donations are doing more than helping to build classrooms. You are helping to bring Jesus to more kids and making Rini's dream come true. Thank you for being missionaries right where you are!
